Assignment 1

The famous Avengers "A" (also called the "Big A") debuted in 1972. It was developed by Gaspar Saladino, a well-known Marvel letterer. It became the basis for the emblem featured in the movies. Since then, the Avengers logo hasn't changed that much, except that there've been some playing around with the palette. If you take a look at the cover of the Avengers comics #96 published in 1972, you'll recognize the now iconic large "A" with an arrow on the right end of its horizontal bar. While the arrow looks slightly different than in the movie, it already has its recognizable style. In the course of time, Marvel has replaced or modified the logo many times, but it's the 1972 "A" that was chosen as the basic element of the logo for the Avengers movies
